READING & HIGHLIGHTING

Read and discuss in class the passage below. Highlight words you don't know and discuss in class.

In ancient times, when kings and queens ruled, regular people had different jobs than we do today. Some of these jobs might seem strange now, but they were important back then. For example, there were people called town criers who would stand in the streets and shout out the news because there were no internet or TVs. Lamp lighters would go around lighting gas or oil lamps in the town. But now, with electricity, we don't need them anymore. Scribes were like historians, they wrote down important events so we could remember them. Knocker-ups were like human alarm clocks, waking people up by knocking on their doors. Rat catchers, as the name suggests, caught rats to keep cities clean. Then there's the groom of the stool, who helped the king when he was in the bathroom. These jobs might seem funny now, but they were normal back then.
